What's on my Mind... on my Heart... and in my Prayers!

Summer vs. the tyranny of the urgent

We often say that we want summertime to be an opportunity to relax, recreate, reflect and restore before we head back into the activity of fall, winter, and summer. With our virtually constant communications stream, and the 24/7/365 news cycle, I think it has become more difficult to do so. To take the time to gain perspective, to let our minds wander, to play, and to read something that inspires a new thought or feeling, is imperative to all kinds of health – physical, emotional, mental and spiritual. Can we consciously carve out space and time to do this? For me, this is a challenge, when so much seems so urgent!

While I was on vacation attempting to carve out this kind God Continue
